My family runs a Korean restaurant. My grandfather came to Japan from Seoul and opened ^①it when he was thirty years old. Now he and my father cook in the kitchen and my mother ^②[welcome] customers. ^③【most / it's / restaurants / of / the / one / popular】 in the city, so they are busy every day. I want to work there in the future, so I often help them (④) Saturdays and Sundays.

One evening in winter, when a young Korean woman came to our restaurant, I was cleaning the tables. She asked, "Can I take out dishes?" I answered, "Sure. What would you like?" She ordered a kind of Korean soup and said, "My sister and I are traveling around Miyazaki. It was very cold today, so she became sick. She's ⑤[sleep] in the hotel now. I ⑥[think] she had to eat something hot. I walked around here and looked (⑦) a Korean restaurant. When I ⑧[find] this restaurant, I was very happy." My mother said, "She'll be fine when she eats our special soup. I'll give you some medicine too. If she needs to go to the hospital, please call us. We'll introduce a doctor to you." The woman said thank you and went back to her hotel.

The next day, the young woman and her sister visited our restaurant before lunch time. Her sister looked fine. They said, "Thank you very much for ⑨your help. Your hot soup was very good, so we didn't need a doctor. We'll leave for home this evening. If you have a chance to visit Seoul, please tell us." I said, "Oh, are you from Seoul? That is my grandfather's hometown, and I would like to go there." I hope we can meet each other in Korea some day.
